The Butcher

Michael R. Lane

Kylie Preston is out for a night of fun with The Liberated Wives Club, a group of close friends who have not only survived divorce but also thrived in its wake. Kylie encounters a stranger who charms her into going home with him. The next day, Kylie Preston's body is discovered in a stolen car, dissected and preserved in ice chests. When Portland Homicide finds themselves at a dead end, Carl Wheaton, a dear friend and colleague of the deceased, implores C. J. Cavanaugh to investigate on behalf of Lunsford Insurance. C. J. cannot say no to his friend. During the course of his investigation of the deranged killer the press has dubbed "The Butcher," more bodies turn up mutilated in precisely the same manner as the deceased Vice-President of Acquisitions for Lunsford Insurance. Each grisly discovery intensifies the race to capture The Butcher before he strikes again.

The Family Stone

Michael R. Lane

Before the supermarket boom, there were corner markets that predominated neighborhoods where most people did their grocery shopping. These corner markets sold all of your staples. They were hospitable and served as a neighborhood junction for the exchange of ideas, beliefs and gossip in much the same way as barbershops and beauty salons still do today. The Family Stone is set in the memory of these institutions long gone from most of the American economic landscape.

It is the year following the long, hot summer in America. Abraham and Winona Stone are the proud owners of Willie's Market, a modest corner grocery store in a working class urban community. The Civil Rights movement is at full throttle. The fight for social equality does not halt personal drama. Intriguing neighborhood sagas of life, death, love, heartbreak, betrayal, hope, faith and redemption play out against the fiery backdrop of civil unrest.

Michael R. Lane

It is only later, when Don Harriman's body is found floating in the Willamette River, that the house cleaner is believed.

Moments before Don Harriman is snatched, he fires off a text message to C. J. Cavanaugh. The problem for C. J. is he has no idea who Don Harriman is or what the text message means. For the Cavanaugh investigation team, what began as a couple of minor events sets off a shockwave of discoveries that lead to intrigue, narcotics trafficking, violence and murder.

UFOs and God (a collection of short stories)

Michael R. Lane

UFOs and God is not single-themed but a medley of characters kayaking their way through the erratic channels of life. Some of these stories are sharp edged and crafted to cut you emotionally to the quick. Others are inviting like a warm cozy room on a bitter cold day. A couple – it is hoped – will simply make you laugh.

In Wake Up, a man decides each morning whether he is to live or die, while UFOs and God explores faith and aliens. After being financially devastated by the 2008 economic crash, Mason Hammer makes a bold decision to live out a long held dream in Echoes.

From farm to urban, from World War II to the Digital Age, the places and times, people and events in UFOs and God spotlight the tender underbelly of the human condition in all its glory and despair on these varied stages of fiction.

Emancipation

Michael R. Lane

This book is primarily concerned with individuals as they fit into the web of other lives -- as opposed to how that web entangles them. Emancipation is a diverse collection of human and humane stories linked in an omnipotent way that only real life can assemble. Parents, grandparents, children, lovers, executive, thief, cop, educator, and drug dealer all have their unique tales to share. Their individual narratives of virtue, mischief, faith, immorality, morality, commitment and perseverance bridge generational gaps and make whole a humane patchwork in an otherwise ambiguous life-scape. In a society where quick labels and categories are selective means of branding one's character, the individual is suffocating. These stories embrace our differences allowing them space to breathe. As we step through this journey of ordinary and extraordinary circumstances, perhaps the lesson learned in these snapshots is that we possess more common threads that bind than differences that divide.

POETRY

Mortal Thoughts

Michael R. Lane

As a teenager, Michael Lane only wrote when necessary. He had nothing against writing: he was – and is – an avid reader. He simply saw no need to write outside of satisfying his academic requirements. That was before he spent time with poetry. Poetry became his first creative writing love. They began dating in high school and she remains his longest running love affair.

Some of his poems whisper. Others scream in your face. Most requests a brief audience to share an interesting insight or revelation. Mortal Thoughts is a culmination of decades of intimate conversations the two have shared.

Sandbox

Michael R. Lane

Sandbox offers loose sand sprinkled onto eclectic wet wanderings at play in the mind of a humble poet.

I am not a professor of literature.
 I am not a teacher of creative writing.
 As a wordsmith, I find myself limited to express what I can in hopes of art. (1-4)

“Plain INsights” begins your word dining pleasure of savory and sweet sand pies in the Sandbox.

A Drop of Midnight

Michael R. Lane

Prologue

“In dim light and air still thick with the heavy smell of fried beef liver and onions, a quiet man sits in his cozy second hand bean bag chair, at his third hand metal desk. Before him, a black, soft leather journal lies in wait. Between its supple bindings are eggshell white pages ruled with thin azure lines. An ordinary pen rest perpendicular to his sternum, three sacred inches from the unbound edge of his journal, placidly awaiting his defining grip. With reverent eyes this man stares down at the blank face of his hallow book, as if expecting it to part and deliver unto him all answers of mysteries ever conceived.”
